The Siege of Sebastopol.

Lord Raglan's dispatch and the newspaper correspondence are in hand, describing the gallant attacks of the Mamelon and the Quarries. The details are highly interesting, but the main facts have been already stated with general correctness.

REPORT OF THE ALLIES.

The Allies have made an unsuccessful attempt to storm Sebastopol. The exact sinister rumors current in regard to the transaction. By some accounts the English loss is set down at four thousand men, but the report is believed to be much exaggerated.

The following are the only official notifications of the event:

Lord Panmure reports to Raglan advices that he has received information that the English troops attacked the Russian Rifle Pits on the morning of the 18th, when assaults which the Russians attempted were offered. Both the Russian and English losses have suffered considerably. The names of the officers who have fallen will be forwarded immediately, but it will be impossible to obtain complete returns of all the casualties before the 20th instant (Morning Post extra).

The Moniteur announces that the Government has received two dispatches from Gen. Pelissier, the first dated the 17th, informed of operations conducted between the General and his Allies, and that the Turks and Chasseurs made a reconnaissance towards Aitodor, Gen. Bosquet occupying the Tchernaya. The next day, at daybreak, the French and English were to attack the Malakoff Tower. The second dispatch, dated the 18th, announces that the attack had failed, and that, although the troops had showed the greatest ardor, and gained a footing in the Malakoff Tower, Gen. Pelissier was obliged to order their retirement into the parallel. This was effected with order, and without much loss by the enemy.

Private accounts published in the London Standard say the loss of British officers, in killed and wounded, amounts to less than seventy. Among the killed and wounded are General Sir C. Campbell, Col. Yea and Col. Shadforth. From the obstinacy and courage with which the combat was maintained by the British at the Redan, and the necessity of eventually retiring from the attack, the slaughter on all sides has been immense, and if the information be correct, the loss, in killed and wounded of the British alone, amounts to very little short of four thousand. The greatest portion of the loss was experienced in a ravine, where a powerful and unexpected battery was opened on the troops. There is reason to fear that the loss has been very great, but Lord Palmerston said on Friday night no additional information had arrived. The Allies lost terribly by the Russians springing a mine, and during the confusion, they (the Russians) recaptured the Mamelon Tower.

Previous advices were to the 17th, stating that there had been smart firing on both sides, but without any result of importance.

A dispatch from Bucharest, viâ Vienna, confirms the report that an expedition has been undertaken against Perekop. Paskiewitch is exceedingly savage against the telegraphic messages Napoleon sends him. He is reported to have recently replied that when anything occurs he will let the Emperor know, but that he has not time to act as telegraph operator. This, according to rumor, accounts for the recent absence of news in the Moniteur.

The Black Sea.

The Russian account of the successes of the Allies in the Sea Azoff is published. Gorchakoff confirms the successes claimed by the Allies, but says that operations against the Sea of Azoff were expected—that not having means to oppose the hostile fleets, the garrison had orders to blow up the batteries and retire—that the grain stores burned by the Allies were mostly private property, and do not materially affect the supply of the army—moreover, anticipating such an attack, supplies were mostly conveyed by land, notwithstanding the facilities offered by sea.

The correspondence relates horrible atrocities committed by the French and Turks at the capture of Kertch. A new expedition is rumored to be preparing to enter the River Don, but the Russians have the entrance defended by twenty-seven gun boats.

Gen. Adlitzow, Vice-Hetman of the Cossacks of the Don, has issued an address for their general enrollment as militia.

Asia.

The Russian forces have advanced and encamped near Bodoc Kale. The Turks have evacuated Bayazid and Choreuk Su. Nassif Pacha has arrived with his staff to Kars. A dispatch from Varna, dated June 17, which was retarded on the way, says the Russians had made an unsuccessful attack on Kars, and it was reported that they had retaken Alaga.

The Austrian Commander has proclaimed martial law in Moldavia, but the Moldavian authorities refuse to promulgate the order unless authorized by the Sultan.

Constantine Balenie, son of the reigning Prince, was killed at Jassy, in a duel, by the Austrian Major Stalleberg. The affair had caused considerable sensation in the Principalities.

The Baltic.

Admiral Baines, with a squadron of seventeen steamers, has left Kiel for the Baltic. The rest of the fleet lay off Gocker Island.

The recent attack on an English boat's crew at Hango, under a flag of truce, causes much excitement in England. Evidence rests solely on the testimony of a negro, the sole survivor, who asserts he heard the Russian commander say, "I don't care a damn for a flag of truce." Unprejudiced supposition is, that the Russians supposed the boat was taking soundings, as recently was done at Kertch.

Admiral Dundas has communicated with the Russian authorities and British Government through the Danish Minister at St. Petersburg, and demands redress. The Russian account in the Invalide Russe says six were killed, and the remainder are prisoners. A dispatch from Dantzic confirms that the officers of the boat, Lieut. Gurney, Dr. Eastins, Mr. Sullivan, and all of the crew, except six, are prisoners.

Prince Gortschakoff is appointed resident Russian Minister at Vienna, M. Titoff to Wurtemberg, and M. Fostan to Hanover.

Russian influence is very active even in the smallest German Courts.

The Journal of St. Petersburg publishes the semi-official discussion on Count Walewski's French Circular of May 23.

The Journal also semi-officially says that peace is possible, if France and England are willing, inasmuch as the fourth point is morally, although not formally, settled, and the other points, namely, the navigation of the Danube and the evacuation of the Principalities are also settled, leaving only the Vienna third point to be arranged.

All the camps are healthy excepting that at Balaklava, where cholera prevails. The Sardinians are suffering, and General Marmora, the younger, is dead.

Hafiz Pacha resigns in office. A national movement is to be erected as the English dead at Scutari.

ENGLAND.

Since the prorogation to Parliament of the report of the Roebuck Committee there has been considerable excitement created by Mr. Roebuck in consequence of his report being expunged by the other members of the Committee, they having given notice of a vote of censure on the Government, so worded as to embrace all sections of the opposition—namely, that Parliament deeply lamenting the sufferings of the army during the Winter campaign in the Crimea, and coinciding with the report of the Sebastopol Committee, that the Administration was the chief cause of the calamities, hereby visits with its severest reprehension every member of the Cabinet, which led to the cause of such disastrous results.

The debate on Administrative reform after repeated adjournments, ended in the unanimous passing of Sir Bulwer Lytton's resolution. That the House of Commons recommends to the earliest attention of ministers the necessity of a careful revision of the various official establishments with a view to simplify and facilitate the transaction of public business and by instituting judicious tests of merit, as well as by removing obstructives to its fair promotion, and by legitimate rewards to secure to the service of the State the largest available proportion of the energy and intelligence for which the people of the country are distinguished.

LATEST INTELLIGENCE.

LONDON, 11:50 A. M.—The following has just been received:

MARSEILLES, Friday Night.—The English steamer Astrologue has arrived, bringing news from Constantinople to the 16th of June. There has been a slight engagement at Eupatoria since the 12th of June. The Russians attacked, unsuccessfully, the batteries. The general loss in the taking of the Mamelon and the quarries is 4,000 men. Wheat is declining at Marseilles.

The Chamber of Commerce.

The Chamber of Commerce met yesterday. Little business of general interest was transacted. Several new members were elected, and the amended by-laws were adopted. Mr. Phœnix, from the Committee on Reciprocity, reported in part that communication had been had, with Hon. Mr. Merritt, of Quebec, Canada, and that the Canadians are desirous of extending the Treaty to all the manufactures of Canada and the United States, and also mutually to open the coasting trade. He asked for time to report fuller. Mr. Browne nominated Mr. Gideon Fountlin as a Marine Surveyor. This was laid on the table to await a vacancy.

The Board then adjourned.

An Iron Railroad Car.

A railroad car made of iron was run for exhibition and trial on the Sixth-avenue Railroad yesterday. It is constructed somewhat differently from the other or wooden cars; is much larger, being able to seat 30 persons, and weighs 1,000 pounds less, and seems to us to possess many other advantages over the cars now in use. It is said to be easily "derailed," and we heard the fear expressed that when a train were it will, when in motion, make a loud, rumbling and disagreeable noise. Yesterday, however, ran very smoothly, and gave general satisfaction.

The Crystal Palace.

Several thousands of persons visited the Crystal Palace on the Fourth. The great object of attraction to most, was evidently the mammoth California tree, which is erected under the dome to the height of 30 feet, and will be raised to the height of 116 feet. No one could be blamed for skepticism in reference to the probability of such a growth of forest tree unless the eye had actually seen it. The wood resembles red cedar. It is without odor, and the leaves are like those of the white cedar.

"NOISE AND CONFUSION."

The day was celebrated much after the usual sort. The weather was of the finest order until 4 o'clock, when a drenching shower drove the masses from the parks and streets to take shelter where they might. After another interval of sunshine, a steady rain set in, which cooled off the enthusiasm of the day marvelously. The fireworks were thereby quenched, but the sound of fire-crackers, pistols and guns was not much abated.

The hotels, printing-offices and shipping were adorned with flags from sunrise to sunset. The military turned out and made a handsome display. Large companies of citizens went out into the country or on excursions along the sea-shore, being tempted by very cheap excursion-tickets on almost all of the railroads and steamboats. Many from the rural districts, too, poured into the City, and spent the day in seeing sights and hearing the crush. The Ten Governors and a very large deputation of citizens went out to visit the Institutions—where the day was celebrated by fireworks, processions, extra dinners, speeches and the like.

There was no speech-making in New-York, except at the Tammany celebration, where Col. Mike made one. In Brooklyn, Jersey City, and the baby cities of Hudson, Hoboken, &c., the day was spent very much as with us.

The only great oration delivered anywhere in our neighborhood was by Edward Everett, at Dorchester, where an immense throng was gathered to honor the occasion and to refresh their patriotism. A reporter from our office gives a vivid description of this affair on another page, and the substance of the oration itself.

The Fourth was the first day of New-York under the Maine Law. In the City the law was in no respect observed. In Brooklyn, no arrests were made for its violation, but much testimony was gathered. Indeed, so long as Mayor Wood administers affairs with us, and Recorder Smith's opinion holds good, the Maine Law must remain utterly a dead letter. No case ever can get far enough to be appealed to the highest Court. And we are assured that the liquor dealers out of the City are so confident of a decision by the Court of Appeals adverse to the law, that they will offer no obstacles, but rather urge to the issue any complaints that the Temperance people may bring against them.

Altogether the Fourth was well spent, but the Maine Law awaits yet the first day of its operation. Though by the letter of the act it was born on the Fourth day into the Empire State, it had not drawn its first breath at day-dawn of the 5th.

NOISES.

The Fourth seldom enjoys a noisier opening. All night of the Third the firing of crackers and pistols prevailed, driving sleep from all eyes and tormenting the nervous. A salute was fired at sunrise on the Battery by Brigadier-General Spicer. The bells of the churches rang for an hour from sunrise, and again at noon, and from 6 o'clock to 7.

THE STREETS AND PARKS.

From early morning the streets were thronged with citizens and strangers. All sorts of peddlers peddled never so briskly from stands extemporized, without license, on all the squares, and greens, candies and cakes, green apples, oranges, bananas, lemons, figs, pipes, soda-water, lemonade, crackers, &c., &c. The fountains were all in full play.

At 5 o'clock the rivers that half an hour before rushed through the gutters were all still, and the side-walks dry as a bone. But by 6 a regular rain had set in, and thenceforth the streets and parks were comparatively deserted.

The Parade of the Military.

We have seldom seen the military of our City appear to a better advantage. Notwithstanding the heat, they turned out in very large numbers. An additional feature of interest was the fact that the advertised programme was carried out to the very minute. The procession commenced to move and the escort reached the Park at the precise moment advertised. At 8 o'clock the division line formed on Broadway, with the right resting on Fourteenth-street. Soon after they marched around Union-square to Fourteenth-street, through Fourteenth-street to Third-avenue, down Third-avenue to Tenth-street, through Tenth-street to Broadway, down Broadway to Chambers-street, through Chambers-street to Centre-street and thence to the east gate of the Park.

THE REVIEW BEFORE THE MAYOR IN THE PARK.

A large number of tickets had been given out by the Committee of the Common Council to citizens and ladies, which admitted them to the Governor's Room. The room and balcony were well filled before the arrival of the procession. The police, under Chief Matsell, kept a large space open in front of the City Hall to enable the military to pass through. Fully fifteen thousand persons were present to witness the parade. At 10 o'clock precisely, Major-General Sanford, with his staff, passed through the east gate of the Park, followed by the Division escort. At the same moment the Committee of the Common Council waited on Mayor Wood and the members of the two branches of the Council and conducted them to the front of the City Hall. On a small platform a small flag belonging to the Mayor's office, and bearing the coat of arms of the City of New-York, was raised. The Mayor then took his position on the platform, the Common Council, and other officials holding their official staffs, ranging themselves on either side.

The veteran corps of 1812, under command of Lieutenant-Colonel Raymond, first passed in review, saluting the Mayor as they passed. They numbered about seventy-five.

The Military then passed in the following order:

The Engineer Corps of the Division, numbering about thirty men.

First Brigade, under the command of Brigadier-General Spicer.

First Regiment, Colonel Ryer, composed of five companies and numbering about two hundred and twenty men—all Cavalry.

Third Regiment, also Cavalry, Colonel Forsley, composed of eight companies, and four hundred men.

Second Regiment, Infantry, Colonel Bogert, preceded by Roberts's Band, composed of eight companies and about five hundred men. Captain Eagleson's company, dressed in the Highland costume, which forms a part of this regiment, attracted much attention.

Seventy-first Regiment, Infantry, Colonel Vosburgh, composed of eight companies and about two hundred and twenty-five men.

Second Brigade under the command of Brigadier-General Yates.

Fourth Regiment, Col. Hincken, composed of two hundred and eighty men. A part of this regiment is composed of cavalry. Besides this, it has two batteries of light artillery of eight pieces each. The artillery passed through the Park in ancients.

Fifth Regiment Infantry, Col. Swartzwelder, composed of eight companies and five hundred men.

Sixth Regiment, Infantry, Col. Pinckney, composed of about 225 men.

Seventy-fifth Regiment, Infantry, Col. Downey, composed of about 120 men. This was the first occasion in which this new regiment has appeared in parade.

Third Brigade—On account of the accident which befell Brigadier-General Hall, the command devolved upon Colonel Duryee, of the Seventh Regiment.

The escort of the Brigade came first. Following was the Engineer corps of the Seventh Regiment. The Brigade then passed in the following order: Seventh Regiment (the National Guard) Lieutenant-Colonel Nevins, composed of eight companies and over 400 men. The marching of this regiment was the best and received the highest commendations of all.

Eighth Regiment, Col. Lyon preceded by Shelton's Band. This regiment has two troops of horse and about 320 infantry.

The Garde La Fayette, Capt. Le Claire, composed entirely of French citizens, is a part of this regiment. It numbers one hundred men.

Ninth Regiment, Infantry, Lieut. Col. Kelley. The regiment turned out about two hundred and fifty men. The first company appeared in the new uniform of the regiment. It is composed of a blue frock coat and bear skin cap.

Fourth Brigade, under the command of Brigadier-Gen. Ewing.

Tenth Regiment, Col. Halsey—this regiment turned out about two hundred and fifty men.

Eleventh Regiment, Infantry, Col. Van Buren, composed of about two hundred and fifty men.

Twelfth Regiment, Infantry, Lieut. Col. Hart, preceded by its Engineer Corps. The regiment turned out about three hundred and fifty men.

Sixty-ninth Regiment, Infantry, Col. Ryan, composed of about two hundred and sixty men.

The Military having passed through the Park, the different companies marched to their respective armories and disbanded.

SEVERE ACCIDENT TO BRIGADIER GEN. HALL.

A severe accident occurred to Brigadier-General Hall, commandant of the brigade, which not only prevented him from accompanying his command in the parade, but will also confine him to his bed for some time to come.

About 9½ o'clock, as he was reviewing his brigade on Broadway, near Amity-street, on the left of the line, his horse made a spring and slipped on the wet stone of the Kimm pavement, and fell. General Hall was thrown with great force to the ground, his right leg being caught under the horse. As soon as he was released, he was conveyed by Councilman Ridder and several other gentlemen to a neighboring house, where his injuries were examined. It was found that both bones of the right leg were broken about four inches above the ankle joint. The bones were not splintered, the fracture being nearly straight across. The fractured limb was immediately set by Dr. Quackenboss, of his staff, Drs. Sayre and Woodward, of Gen. Sanford's staff, and Dr. Eager, of the Seventh Regiment. Gen. Hall was then conveyed to his residence in a carriage. He was visited after the parade by all general field and staff officers of his brigade. He is at the present time in good health and spirits, though suffering much from pain in the fractured limb. He will probably be confined to his house for about two months.

The Day at Tammany.

Not a very large but a very respectable audience assembled at Tammany Hall shortly after 1 o'clock P. M., pursuant to call, and in accordance with annual custom. The Tammany Society, or Columbian Order, founded in 1789, was represented by some of its choicest spirits. They deemed it, in the terms of their circular, "peculiarly fitting at the present time, when civil liberty has been invaded by legislative influence, and religious liberty is threatened by the organization of intolerant and proscriptive men, that we should return to the great truths of the Declaration of Independence, and the early contests in which that Declaration was vindicated."

As soon as the Sachems began to assemble, Shelton's fine Band took its place on the balcony and played some magnificent airs. At 1½ o'clock the procession was formed, and, having paraded the room, W. D. Kennedy, Esq., Father of the Council, and Lorenzo B. Shepard, Esq., Grand Sachem, ex-officio, took their places at the desk, and the other Sachems seated themselves around. Among those present we noticed Sachems R. R. Connolly, Andrew Fromont, Casper C. Childs, Col. Alex. Mino, Hon. J. Kelley and Douglas Taylor.

Lorenzo B. Shepard, Esq., opened the proceedings with an address.

MR. LORENZO B. SHEPARD'S SPEECH.

Brothers: The revolving year has brought us once again that day of which we are most justly proud. It returns in peace and prosperity. No national calamity represses the rejoicings with which we hail its presence. Gratitude for the services and devotion of our fathers, just pride for our high national honor and power, and the revelings of the future filled with the promise of a grandeur unapproached in the history of man, felicitously concur to elevate our spirits to the dignity of the occasion.

There is no clime in which our flag, borne by the leviathans of our commerce, does not leap to meet the rising sun of this most glorious day. There is no breeze under Heaven that does not bear the voices of these resounding cannon which vindicated triumphantly upon the great deep, "free trade and sailor's rights."

We shall most fitly begin this day by expressing our humble thanks to that kind Providence which has maintained our country during the perils incident to national existence, and kept alive that patriotic ardor which fostered a Democracy above mere sectional, local or temporary purposes, and with a spirit as philosophic as it is just, embraces our remotest brethren as warmly as those who are nearer. This spirit, the spirit of our fathers, perpetuates the Union;—when it shall become corrupted, and public virtue and service shall give no recognized title to public respect; when constitutional duties shall be considered humiliating or degrading, then, indeed, our disintegrated Union will tumble into antagonistic elements, and the house of free government be extinguished in lasting gloom.

As brothers of the Tammany Society we cannot forget that its foundations were laid by men who have departed. Not one new fingers upon the stage of life. They have gone in the fullness of years and of honor, leaving us the heirs of their noble name—our country, and those principles of civil and religious liberty which infinitely transcend in their blessings to mankind the imperial gifts of all the sovereignties which the history of men records. Those principles are the links which bind us to our fathers, our brethren, and our children. It is our pleasing duty to keep those links strong and bright. And this day, as if in pursuance of the expected free whose surgery we invoke, let us reverently add one other stone to their monument, one other anthem to their praise!

After concluding this address, Mr. Shepard called upon Hon. J. Kelley to read the Declaration of Independence, which being done, Mr. Shepard proposed, in accordance with their custom, the memory of the author of the Declaration of Independence—Thomas Jefferson.

The customary oration was then delivered by Col. Alexander Mino, the orator of the day.

Col. Mino opened his address with a sort of rhapsody, appealing to our Fathers, and expressive of gratitude to them. The portion which treats of the history of Tammany is better:

THE ORIGIN OF TAMMANY.

I will venture, said he, to vouch the care of some of my brethren of the Columbian Order, by briefly stating the origin of the Tammany Society: In 1772-3, during the period of dissatisfaction which was strengthening with the strength and growing with the growth of the malcontents in the American Colonies, the loyalists and office holders under the Ministry of that time—especially in the secret towns—organized a goodly number of King George's loyal subjects into St. George's and St. Andrew's Societies, to sustain the Crown in its acts of usurpation. To oppose and counteract the effect of these Tory Associations, it was suggested by a member of the more liberal estimate to form an Order on more liberal principles; and as they were growing more and more friendly to the Indians, they resolved that the popular name should be of Indian origin. Tammany was an Indian chief then residing in Pennsylvania, of extremely virtuous and benevolent habits—noble, generous, brave, social and intelligent, with extremely high notions of liberty and equality. Thus they adopted as their Saint. The first members of this Society, principally composed of the officers of the train bands in the militia and some other distinguished citizens connected with commerce and commerce, fearing of the secret plots for organization, were in fear of the utmost security of themselves and their families. Hence the Revolution was the only remedy—and among most of them there they could never make many converts at that early day they counted to join them. Some were thus instructing of, by the association of talent, bravery and wealth, to counteract and overthrow many of the deep laid schemes of the St. George's, St. Andrew's, and other Loyal and Tory Clubs of that time. Many a meeting of the Tammany Society of that day was interrupted by an accurate summons from the boom of the cannon, or volley of musketry. These meetings were "No Kingsmen!" "A Union of Sons from Sachem!" "Liberty or Death!" About the time Tammany Society found it necessary to place itself in connection in a regularly formed "Society of Cincinnati," in consequence of the augmentation in its character of the aforementioned feature that none but the select sons of the members should be eligible to membership. Hence it became unpopular with many of the officers—as much so as Washington, who had contributed to have his name used as President of it, had to get the obnoxious clause repealed, to appease the Democratic opposition of the Sachems of Tammany Society, who were opposed to all Hereditaries of nobility.

Much applause followed the reading of the above. An ode, written for the occasion by F. B. Hulbert, Esq., was then sung by Messrs. Connolly, Taylor, G. B. Hall, and Albert Wallace, assisted by the audience.

A collation having been provided in another room by Messrs. Howard & Brown, the proprietors of Tammany, the greater number of the audience repaired there, the price of admission being $1. The first regular toast was given by Mr. Shepard before the meal was commenced. It was—

The Day we Celebrate—May it be as permanent as Time.

After the viands had been amply discussed, the second regular toast was proposed.

The President of the United States—The first Commoner of the land—the instrument of freemen to protect public and private rights.

To this toast John Cochrane, Esq., responded. He said that the only organization that opposed Franklin Pierce, was that which opposed Tammany. Tammany, however, stood, and would continue to stand for Pierce, under all circumstances.

The third regular toast was:

The Memory of Washington—Immortal as his fame.

Drank uncovered, the band playing a funeral dirge.

The fourth toast, proposed like the others, by Mr. Shepard, was

The Tammany Society.

Responded to by Mr. O'Keefe.

The fifth toast was,

The Signers of the Declaration of Independence—The Modern Runnymede—who demanded and obtained a better Magna Charta.

Air by the band—We are all a Band Brothers.

Ambrose L. Pinney responded.

The sixth toast was,

The Constitution and the Union—The great pillars of Liberty.

Richard B. Connolly, County Clerk, responded. The band played that stirring air, "Clear the Husky Raccoon Down."

To the next toast,

The Governor of the State of New-York.

Captain Rynders responded, mounting on the table that he might make himself heard above the uproarious sounds of conviviality which now began to prevail.

The eighth regular toast was,

The Army and Navy—The Shield and Buckler of Columbia.

Major Hall briefly responded.

The next toast was,

The Empire State—The brightest Star in the constellation of the Union.

Other toasts were drunk and other speeches made, which we have not space to enumerate. The whole proceedings were characterized by the utmost harmony and good feeling.

The Day at "the Institutions."

A HAPPY DAY AMONG THE MADMEN.

The Lunatic Asylum presented the singular spectacle of having all its inmates collected in the several halls, to celebrate the anniversary of their country's independence. A banner, which had been prepared by one of the lunatics, was suspended on the staircase, above the second landing, and had the following motto inscribed upon it:

RELIGION, EDUCATION, LIBERTY.
III.
INDIVIDUALS OF AN INEVITABLE TRINITY.
THE SOUL OF REPUBLICANISM.

The following was the programme of arrangements:

Chaunt of praise—"Oh! come let us sing, &c."

Opening prayer by Rev. W. Shearer.

Reading of Declaration of Independence, by a lunatic, who would only allow his initials, J. B., to be published, as he was decidedly opposed to having himself "paraded in the newspapers."

Ode to America, composed for the occasion by W. A. Burdett, an inmate of the institution.

Three of the female lunatics joined in songs, whilst two of the mad violinists, on their instruments, and Mr. Burdett, on the piano, accompanied them.

Oration composed and delivered by the same.

Echo Song composed and set to music by the same.

This gentleman is a most interesting madman, being evidently a man of genius and education, and was formerly connected with a newspaper in the West. On our arrival, he politely informed us that he would feel most happy in furnishing us with the account of the whole proceedings. We had no idea at this period that he was a lunatic, and having asked him if the person who was reading the Declaration of Independence was a madman, he replied, "Oh, decidedly—he is a regular madman, and belongs to the house. We are all mad here, with the exception of Doctor Ranney and the Ten Governors. I don't think they are mad." All the inmates, both male and female, who were present, appeared to take unusual interest in the whole affair. After the preliminary arrangements had been gone through, our intellectual madman, with all the grace of an accomplished orator, delivered the following address:

MR. BURDETT'S ADDRESS.

Friends and Fellow Patients of this Institution: I have been invited by a Committee of gentlemen [illegible]

[illegible]

Religion is a subject of paramount importance to the minds of the Christian, the philanthropist and the true patriot; and the only source of real happiness here or hereafter. Without it the best efforts of human genius in the amelioration of their race must prove utterly futile; with it, and great things can be accomplished on the part of the various institutions which have for their aim the evangelization of the world and the accomplishment of that mass of millennium glory when all shall know the Lord. Without it, the strength of a giant in the cause of idol gods is made utter weakness by Omnipotence; with it, the feeble arm of the contemned minstrel is promoted to the championship of truth. Religion is the handmaid of prosperity, the material essence of all that is permanent of happiness here and of pure eternal bonefaction and is a subject too deep and profound for unassisted human intellect to comprehend—a subject lost from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes. How beautifully expressed by the meek believed lips on another occasion,—"Suffer little children," &c. This is religion.

REPORT OF BLACKWELL'S ISLAND.

Of Liberty—the third individual in that glorious trinity—permit me to say a few words in the important relation—a subject quite as irrelevant to the occasion and occasion, as your speaker humanly deems he is.

Blackwell's Island, friends, is no fair for the advocate of Liberty. Could Alexander Selkirk—or, his name more familiarly known in youthful story, "Robinson Crusoe,"—could he revive again, and escape from the wreck on Blackwell's Island, as upon that desert isle of the sea, he might indeed sigh all currently for liberty, but with altered feelings to prompt his sighs; he should be no monarch of all he surveyed. Of Liberty, these the captives of this island are supposed to speak, but of that quiet and unostentatious individual Liberty we feel a power, a will, a prerogative to speak, and the closing remarks of this address shall be devoted, partly to her praise and partly to the progress of American Republicanism.

EDUCATION.

Of Education, then. Where—oh, where shall we begin to discourse her honors; so set forth her claims to respect her blessings? Shall we antiquarian thoughts to the days of Athenian glory, when the cultivation of the individual mind was carried to the highest point of erudition! When the princes of Rome, opulent to the throne of European Monarchies, were furnished with sage and selected tutors—with personal instructors, and with all the facilities of classic, political and history too!—or shall we turn to the pressing and marvel that we find no clouds in a Plato, a Pericles, a Thucydides, a Socrates, a Cicero, or a Demosthenes; or shall we rest rather glory in the fact that it is the exercise of knowledge, of which one honest fact the revered land of Free Institutions of Learning? Our boast is in the generally diffused, universal character of our acquirements of manhood, which, if compared with the status of a few minds, would be conducive to [illegible] a host of Plato, and [illegible]

Accidents.

A boy named JAMES MURPHY had his face badly burned by the unexpected explosion of a pistol.

JOHN ENNIS, a lad 13 years of age, residing at No. 189 East Thirty-ninth-street, was badly gored by an ox that had been frightened by fire crackers.

WM. MAHON, a lad residing No. 71 Henry-street, was seriously injured by the explosion of a sarsaparilla bottle that had been filled with powder. The bottle had not exploded soon enough, and he lifted it up to see what the matter was when it exploded.

MRS. PHILLIPS, wife of SAMUEL PHILLIPS, residing at No. 22 King-street, while sitting at the back stoop of her house, was shot through the thigh with a ball from a pistol or a gun discharged from the rear of the house No. 19 Charlton-street. At the same time the brother of Mr. PHILLIPS had a narrow escape; a ball passed through his pantaloons and lodged in the ground.

JOSEPH MARVIN, a little boy about 2½ years of age, fell from a window in the house No. 40 Baxter-street, and was almost instantly killed. An inquest was held on the body.

TIMOTHY HALEY was seriously injured by the falling of a building in Walker-street, on Tuesday. He was taken to the City Hospital.

HENRY LOWRY, a boy residing at No. 46 Orchard-street, had his foot badly sprained by the falling of a flag-stone.

A man named MICHAEL HALEY was found lying upon the sidewalk in Centre-street, with his head cut in a dreadful manner. He had fallen upon the pavement while in a state of intoxication. He was taken to the hospital.

PATRICK ROONEY, residing at No. 136 Washington-street, was severely injured by the discharge of a pistol in the hands of GEORGE REPPAR. ROONEY was conveyed to the hospital.

EDWARD MORGAN, residing at No. 6 Depeyster-street, was run over by Hose Company No. 47 and slightly injured.

FERDINAND SMITH, a youth about 16 years of age, in firing a pistol off, discharged the ball at a lady, which passed through her hair, grazing the head. The boy was arrested and committed to the Tombs to answer.

A young man employed in a bakery on the corner of Second-avenue and Forty-fifth-street, was wounded severely by the explosion of a camphene lamp.

THOS. EAGEN fell from a stage and was severely hurt.

CATHARINE DELLICKER, of No. 53 Thirty-ninth-street was prostrated by the heat.

ADOLPH MILKER, No. 363 First-avenue, was run over by a wagon and seriously hurt.

An inquest was held by the Coroner on a child, ten years of age, burned to death by the explosion of a camphene lamp at No. 3 Dominick-street.

LAWRENCE NORRIS received a bullet in the abdomen. The ball passed entirely through the body, coming out at the right side. The pistol was discharged by some unknown person.

WM. O'CONNOR was injured by the explosion of some powder, on the corner of Spring and Mason streets.

ROBERT PETERS, on the corner of Ninth-avenue and Forty-eighth-street, had two of his fingers shot off.

A son of LEVI RICARD was seriously injured by an explosion of powder. A son of LEVI VAN GRITNER was also seriously hurt, with carelessly using powder.

The squall in the afternoon stripped several sloops of their sails and laid one flat on her side. No serious losses to anybody, however. When the rain came down at the heaviest the boats laid to—and took it.

Three boys, on the corner of Tenth-avenue and Eighteenth-street, named COLWELL, IRVIN and MCCOY, were firing off pistols, when one of their powder flasks caught fire by some accident or another and exploded, severely injuring the boys in the hands and face. They were immediately taken home and attended to.

A woman, named MARY O'CONNOR, was sunstruck on Wednesday and taken to the City Hospital.

A man, named WM. O'CONNOR, in the Fifth Ward, had his face badly burned by the bursting of a powder-flask. He was conveyed to the Hospital.

A child, seven years of age, named ELLEN LILLY, whose parents reside at No. 193 Avenue D, was run over by one of the Avenue C and Houston-street line of stages, Wednesday, and killed almost instantly. Those who observed the occurrence say it was purely accidental.

A party of gentlemen at Mount Vernon, while engaged in firing a salute in honor of the Fourth, had one of their number named RAYNOR severely injured, by the premature discharge of a cannon. RAYNOR was ramming home the cartridge when the explosion took place, and his hands were severely injured, possibly crippled for life.

The schooner Middlesex, Capt. TAPPAN, left Wyckoff's Landing, Staten Island Sound, at 9 A. M. on the morning of the Fourth, with a party of pleasure, consisting of 22 persons, 8 of them ladies and children. About 3 P. M. a squall struck the vessel and capsized her, and in a few moments she turned bottom up. At the time she capsized and filled, all hands except the captain and one other gentleman were in the cabin, and were with great difficulty rescued by those on deck. The gentlemen behaved with great coolness. One young gentleman in particular is deserving of much praise for his efforts to save a young lady who was missing, and when after diving into the main hatch he found completely immersed in the water, so jammed between a water cask and the vessel's side that much effort was required to release her; he succeeded, however, but she was much exhausted. The vessel now lies bottom up where she was capsized in Prince's Bay, about a mile and a half from the shore.

Fires and Alarms.

The fire-bells scarcely ceased sounding alarms, for the different Districts, throughout the entire Fourth. The firemen, and the policemen reserved for such duty, were kept quite busy. None of the fires, however, did any serious damage.

At 10 o'clock, A. M., the roof of MCCULLOCH'S paint shop, in Twenty-first street, near Broadway, took fire on the roof, from some of the miniature fire-works flying about, but was almost immediately extinguished by officer FARRINGTON, of the Eighteenth Ward Police.

At 1 o'clock P. M., Officer CREWS, of the First Ward, discovered a fire breaking out of the sixth story window of No. 132 Water-street, corner of Pine-street, occupied by JOHN COOPER, lithograph printer. The firemen and police reserves were speedily on the spot and put it out before any but trifling damage was sustained. The fire is thought to have been caused by an incendiary.

About 2½ o'clock a fire broke out in a row of old wooden stables situated on the east side of Waverley-place, between Amos and Christopher streets, and were all soon destroyed. They were owned by M. de L. MARNY and a Mr. JOSEPH LOSS, about $500. The fire originated from fire crackers.

The old frame house No. 24 Gansevoort-street, owned by WM. B. ASTOR, and occupied by several poor females, was damaged by fire to the amount of about $100.

About 9¾ o'clock P. M., a fire was discovered issuing from the fourth story of No. 320 Washington-street, occupied by WEINWEIGHT & SAYERS, as a wood and willow-ware store. The fourth story and roof were entirely destroyed.

At 10 40 o'clock, P. M., a fire broke out on the roof of [illegible] No. 9 Water-street, but it was soon extinguished and with trifling damage.

The building on the corner of Vesey and Green-wich streets, occupied as a store and dwelling, was discovered on fire at 12 o'clock. P. M. [illegible] put out with much damage.

At 11½ o'clock a fire broke out in the fourth story of a building in the rear of No. 72 Fourth-street, occupied by SULLIVAN D. HEBBERLEY as a lock factory. It proceeded from the furnace. Damage trifling.

At 1 o'clock yesterday morning a fire occurred in the basement of No. 92 Warren-st., occupied as a patent medicine manufactory. The upper portions of the building were occupied as a dining saloon and for offices. The firemen were on the ground immediately and confined the flames to the basement, which was not much damaged.

Fire in Prince-street—Narrow Escape from Suffocation.

About 12 o'clock on Wednesday night, a fire broke out on the first floor of building No. 128 Prince-street, occupied by Mr. J. C. STONE, as a fancy store, in which was stored a quantity of monster fireworks. The alarm was soon given and the police of the Eight Ward and firemen were quickly on the ground. Owing to the material within the store, the flames made rapid headway, and an immense quantity of suffocating smoke soon filled the building, and spread about so much as to retard the labors of the firemen and police. Two families occupied the upper part of the building—those of Mr. JAMES NAGLE and Mr. BEERS, who were in bed and asleep at the breaking out of the fire. Their danger was, of course, most imminent, as all hopes of escape by the stairs were cut off by the flames and smoke. This fact created terrible excitement among those collected on the outside, who took speedy means for rescuing, if possible, those in peril. Finally, with much difficulty, the firemen succeeded by means of their ladders in reaching the second story, into which they went, and by groping on their hands and knees reached the beds of the sleepers, carried them to the window, aroused them, and with the assistance of the policemen and firemen on the outside, lowered them to the sidewalk. The persons thus saved were Mr. and Mrs. BEERS, and Mr. and Mrs. NAGLE and their two daughters, two sons, and their niece. Some of the occupants of the building thus aroused, in their excitement and haste to escape, were some what injured. Miss MARGARET NAGLE leaped from the second story to the ground, injuring her back and hips, and spraining both her ankles. Miss ELLEN NAGLE, while descending from the second story, got her foot entangled in the rungs of the ladder and fell to the ground, spraining both her ankles. She was also otherwise injured, though not seriously. Their cousin, Miss MARY ANN ——, was badly bruised about the shoulders and head, while effecting her escape.

After the above named persons had been rescued, it was ascertained that another person—a son of Mr. NAGLE—was yet within the building in his bed-room, on the attic. A few daring firemen again darted into the building and reached the attic where they found the young man soundly asleep, unconscious of his danger, and the room filled with a dense and suffocating smoke. He objected decidedly to being aroused from his slumbers, and resisted strongly his rescuers, who were conveying him in their arms down to the second floor, and asked them "what they meant—what they were going to do there?" He was soon made conscious of the state of affairs, however, and speedily reached the street, greatly exhausted as were also the gallant fellows who had saved him.

So overpowering was the smoke that the rescuers were compelled to drop three times one of the females whom they were conveying, and rush to the window to catch a breath of the fresh air.

The gallant firemen who more particularly distinguished themselves on this occasion, by thus saving so many lives, are THOMAS O'BRIEN, CHARLES WILSON and LEVI D. WHITE, of Hose Company No. 56; GARDENER VAN BRUNT, of Engine No. 11; and a member of Hook and Ladder Company No. 6, whose name our Reporter was unable to ascertain.

The damage to the building was not very extensive. The whole of the store premises and first story were "[illegible]ted," and the tenement part was more or less damaged by water.

Mr. STONE'S loss amounts to $1,000—$900 on stock and $100 on furniture. He is insured for $1,000 in the Lorillard Insurance Company. Mr. NAGLE'S loss amounted to $500. Mr. BEERS'S loss is small.

The Theatres.

The frequent showers of rain yesterday contributed in no slight degree to the profit of such places of amusement as were open in the day time. From the fifty-cent theatre down to the six-cent side show, there was a well sustained and profitable ebb and flow.

The Fireworks No Go.

Individual enterprise carried the day on the Fourth as against the Corporation in the matter of setting off fireworks. The frequent dashes of rain which took place in the afternoon, prevented the elevation of the large pieces prepared for the occasion under the $4,000 appropriation of the Common Council, to their proper places, and fully thirty thousand people who visited the Park during the course of the evening to see the pyrotechnic display, were disappointed. Large numbers who visited Madison-square, Tompkins-square, Missionsquare, the Distributing Reservoir, Carmansville, Harlem, Lamartine-place, and the junction of East Broadway and Grand-street, also to enjoy the pleasures growing out of the City's liberality, by seeing the displays advertised in the programme to take place there, were also disappointed so far as we can learn.

Mr. ROBERT GRANT, the inventor of the Calcium Light, displayed on [illegible] his finest lights from the spire of Grace Church. It illuminated Broadway through its whole distance, North and South, a distance of four or five miles. The exhibition was highly successful, and was highly commended by all who saw it.

Display of Fireworks Designed for the Fourth of July.

The Committee of Arrangements of the Common Council for the celebration of the Fourth of July give notice that the display of fireworks designed for the evening of the Fourth instant, but postponed in consequence of the unfitness of the weather, will take place on Monday evening next, the 9th inst. Should the weather that evening also prove unfavorable the display will be further postponed until the first fair evening thereafter, succeeding a fine afternoon. By order,

CHAS. H. HASWELL, Chairman.
C. H. TURNER, Secretary.

Cricket on the Fourth.

A match was played at Hoboken between twenty-two members of the New-York and St. George's Club. These were a good may friends of Cricket on the ground, and if the weather had not proved treacherous they would have had a good day's sport. A very heavy thunder storm between 3 and 4, which nearly blew the tent down and wetted all who took shelter under its roof, put a stop to the day's play in the middle of the second innings. Score:

LONG ISLAND.

The Fourth in Brooklyn.

The day was ushered in with the firing of a national salute from Fort Greene by the veterans of the war of 1812, and the ringing of bells—this jubilant manifestation was repeated at noon and at sunset, half an hour each. At 7 o'clock A. M. the military paraded, taking the route as announced, and were reviewed by his Honor, Mayor HALL, and the members of the Common Council, at the City Hall, at 9 o'clock, and soon after were dismissed. The usual demonstrations at large, of letting off fireworks on private account, were as numerous as on any previous occasion, and we are happy to say no very serious accident occurred to mar the festivities of the day. A boy named STACK had the fingers of his left hand blown off in front of the Post-Office by the bursting of a pistol which he was firing, and two others had one finger each blown off by premature discharges of pistols in their possession. Several others were injured slightly in different parts of the city.

The excitement was increased about 8 o'clock P. M., by a fire in Jay-street, near Fulton-avenue. The old Mansion House at this place caught fire in the roof from fire crackers, but was extinguished after the roof had been burnt off. A fight occurred here between the firemen and the police, which at one time bid fair to be serious in its results, but was quelled by the arresting of several firemen. The cause of this disturbance was the refusal of the Chief of Police to admit any person to the burning building without a firemen's uniform on. Many members of the Department, who had gone to the fire without this, felt indignant and endeavored to force an entrance.

About the same time another fire broke out at the corner of York and Charles streets, in building occupied by Mr. MAHON. This was also set on fire by fire-crackers, and was extinguished after the roof had been burnt off.

The City Fireworks were let off from the top of the City Hall in the evening, much to the gratification of thousands of citizens who had assembled there. The exhibition was precipitated by the approach of a rain storm, which caused many of those present to reach home wet to the skin.

The National flag was displayed from all the shipping and public buildings in the City—excepting the head-quarters of the King's County Liquor Dealers' Association, on Montague-street.

The fear of a disturbance, entertained by some people, was quite groundless. Everything passed off peaceably; indeed, we cannot remember a celebration of the Fourth which presented such features of order and decorum. Most of the liquor dealers kept their houses closed, although it was, in some instances, not impossible to obtain "a horn" by applying at the private door. A few dealers made no show of closing until about noon, after which time it was nearly impossible to find any place where liquor could be obtained in the whole City. At night two or three places were open in Fulton-street, but the owners were very chary of strangers, and when they did oblige an old customer, they preferred to do so as they said, "out of the original package"—namely, out of a huge demijohn, containg several gallons. It was understood that the members of the Canon League were around in great force.

THE FOURTH AT GREEN POINT, (BROOKLYN.)

The citizens in this locality got up an independent celebration on their own account, which passed off very pleasantly. The Declaration of Independence was read by A. J. PROVOST, Esq., and an oration was delivered by H. P. LOVELL, Esq., of New-York, and in the evening there was a display of fireworks.

The only accident in all Brooklyn, of a very serious nature, happened at this place. A boy, named JOHN H. RHODES, while placing a loaded pistol in his pocket, it was discharged, and the contents lodged in his stomach, inflicting a mortal wound. The lad was taken to the house of his parents, in Attorney-street, New-York.

JAMAICA.

The people of Jamaica had their celebration in HERRIMAN'S Woods about a quarter of a mile from the village. Mr. JOHN A. KING made a speech and General NYE delivered an oration. The procession then took dinner and returned to the village at one of the hotels. There were many guests from New-York.

Struck by Lightning.

The house No. 12 DeKalb-avenue, Brooklyn, owned by JACOB BROWN, and occupied by Mr. B. STAFFORD, was struck by lightning at 4½ P. M. The house was much shattered; servant girl thrown several feet; one window-frame completely demolished; Mrs. STAFFORD had but just left the window, and passed to an adjoining room. No one was seriously injured. It was strange that it was not set on fire. The chimney was torn to fragments.

The Fourth at West Point.

Dr. SAMUEL JOHNSON related that a certain individual, writing a "Natural History of Iceland," had one book specially devoted to the subject "Of Owls in Iceland," the first and only chapter of which consisted of the sentence, "There are no owls in Iceland." In like manner, the historian of the glorious Fourth, writing on the celebration at West Point, might briefly record, "There was no celebration at West Point." In truth, the demonstrations here have been very few and far between of late years. Precisely at noon there was a salute of thirteen guns in honor of the original number of the States when Independence was declared.

But there were "lots of fun" outside. One capital joke occurred—amusing to all except the sufferers. New-York sent a steamboat full of persons, bound on an excursion to West Point, where (they had been told,) the day was to be honored with remarkable éclat. They had a glorious voyage up the river—in beauty worth a dozen Rhines, in commercial position and utility worth a score of Thamesses. They arrived at West Point landing-place, a right merry company. But there they were met with a ruthless standing-order which prohibits the landing of excursionists,—as such! So they had to cross the river to Garrison's's Ferry, where they were transferred to the compact ferry steamer, the Putnam, (so called, we presume, in honor of the county in which Judge GARRISON's homestead and landed estate are situated,) and were then taken across the river again, and landed without opposition—as ferry passengers! They rushed en masse up to the Military Academy; they saw the white tents of the cadets picturesquely parceled on the fine plateau; they discovered that there were no particular manifestations in honor of the day, they surrendered themselves to Roe's Hotel, which had been provisioned as if it were a besieged fortress. They obtained refreshment, ad libitum, but when they called for "strong waters" (as is the custom of excursionists on an afternoon,) were informed that Captain ROE kept a Temperance house, and, besides, would never violate the anti-drink law, which make champagne drinking next door to a capital felony, and places brandy and water imbibitionbody a degree or two below lacryma.

Our reporter wisely kept on the east side of the river. He went by the Hudson River Road, and though heaps of passengers had been disgorged at various stopping places along the line, reached Garrison's Ferry at the exact minute promised on the yellow time bill. (President SLOAN and Superintendent SYKES have made the arrivals so regular that people set their watches by them, in preference of the sun, which sometimes does not shine, whereas, they always do.) After a satisfactory dinner, he was taken a series of drives, behind a pair of two-fifties, to see the beautiful Highlands and river views which abound in Putnam County. The view is fairly fine, and beautiful they say. He saw all sorts of landscapes and water views. He looked from the top of the Iron Rock. He noticed that cherries appear to be the staple (roadside) produce of Putnam County. He took tea from the identical table, and beneath the shadow of the south redoubt, at which WASHINGTON himself had sat, in the war of Independence, nearly seventy years ago, and when further happened to him remains to be related in his Autobiography—in nine folio volumes. Only, as a memorable matter, he may say, that with the exception of a very small flare-up, consisting of a fire cent packet of Chinese squibs, he happily did not smell powder during the whole day.

TO NEWBURG.

A considerable number of citizens went up by two excursion boats to Newburg, and the cars were loaded continuously. The Maine Liquor Law was rigidly observed—no person drinking anything strong whatever, except on the sly. The general practice of the day, however, seemed to be considerably "on the sly."

AT YONKERS.

Not a drop of liquor to be had—quiet, pleasant times—fireworks before GETTY'S in the evening. The cars ran off the track below Yonkers, and the passengers enjoyed the rain.

Mount Vernon.

The citizens of the adjoining town of Mount Vernon celebrated our national anniversary with unusual spirit. The ladies of the Dutch Reformed Church of that place gave an entertainment, the Declaration of Independence was read and patriotic addresses delivered. The proceeds of the dinner, and other luxuries are to be appropriated to the liquidation of the debt of the church. At night there was a splendid display of fireworks, under the immediate direction of WM. H. GAKLEY, Esq.

Street Arrest under the Prohibitory Law.

CHARLES H. SMITH, proprietor of the Globe Hotel, in Howard-street, was on Wednesday arrested and brought before Judge BIRDSALL, of the Marine Court, on a charge of violating the new Prohibitory law. He gave bonds for his appearance, to answer the charge when called upon.

WISE LIQUOR DEALERS.

We hear that two liquor dealers in the Eleventh Ward, took down their bars and turned their liquor into the streets. They said they would not continue in a business which was contrary to the law of the State. All honor to them.

How the Fourth was Kept on Board the Hermann.

To the Editor of the New-York Daily Times:

The Fourth of July on board the steamer Hermann was celebrated with much spirit. On the evening of the 3d inst., our gentlemanly and efficient captain assembled all the passengers, and to the gay and festive music of the Polk Redowa and Scottisch, the dawning hours of the Fourth were ushered in. Upon the stroke of 8 bells, which on shore we call the midnight hour, the dancing ceased, and our commander surprised us with festivity as rare as unexpected. The ladies, each with a cavalier attending, had no sooner ascended the quarter-deck than a salute was fired of 13 guns, (man-of-war style,) while blue-lights and rockets announced that the 79th advent of our glorious anniversary had dawned on us. Capt. HIGGINS, at the head of the table, made some well-chosen and appropriate remarks, proposing as the first toast "The health of the babe named Liberty." His toast was responded to by W. C. HAMILTON, Esq., of Maryland, and followed by a toast to the health of the commander and his lady, who had contributed in no small degree to the pleasure of the voyage. The health of Mr. R. VENAS, officer of the steamer, was then proposed, and was responded to by that gallant officer.

Sunrise was duly ushered in by a national salute. At 11 o'clock, the Chairman, Mr. P. C. BROWNE, of Ohio, introduced W. C. HAMILTON, Esq., as Orator of the day, who, after a brief and brilliant oration, proceeded to read the Declaration of Independence, in the presence of the officers, crew and passengers—the former in uniform. At the close of which the "Star-Spangled Banner" was sung.

The passengers then dispersed, only to be called together again to participate in a sumptuous repast, when there was an address of thanks presented to the Captain of the Hermann, by Mr. BART, of Canada.

The Fourth in Jersey City.

The day passed off without any special event. Salutes were fired and the bells were rung at sunrise, noon and sunset. The Continental Guard, Capt. SANDERSON, turned out in full strength, at 5 o'clock in the morning, on parade, and made a fine appearance. In the evening all of the fireworks were let off at Van Vorst-square, except the principal piece, which was reserved until last evening.

At Communipaw, there was a rather quiet and very pleasant celebration of the day, as previously announced, under the auspices of the ladies.

HOBOKEN.—FIREWORKS.

The freshness of the weather on the evening of the Fourth prevented the display of fireworks that evening in Hoboken, but it came off in fine style last evening.

Fourth of July at Cape May.

The Fourth was celebrated at Congress Hall, Cape May, with unusual éclat. Thirteen guns were fired at sunrise. A meeting of the guests of the hotel and people of the town was held, and JOSEPH F. SEARING, Esq., was appointed to the Chair.

The Declaration of Independence was read by Hon. WILLIAM BIGLER, late Governor of Pennsylvania.

"Yankee Doodle" from the band followed, after which the following toast was offered by SAMUEL HOUSTON, Esq., of New-York:

The President of the United States—The guardian of our national Union and the protector of our national honor.

The President rose, expressed his surprise at being called upon to speak under the circumstances, thanked the gentleman from New-York to whom he was indebted for the compliment, spoke briefly of the American Union, its origin in the Revolution, the humble part which his ancestors had taken in asserting the independence which they were celebrating, alluded to the value of the Union, the importance of preserving it, his determination to maintain it and enforce all the laws essential to its preservation, &c., and took his seat amid general applause.

His remarks were very feliciously expressed and enthusiastically received. The following toast was then read by the Chair:

Delaware—Among the first to ratify the Constitution, and we have the evidence in her able representative, now our guest, that she will be the last to forsake it.

JOHN M. CLAYTON, who was expected to be present and respond to this toast, was kept away by indisposition. His absence was apologized for by Gov. BIGLER.

Rev. Mr. WILLIAMS, of Cape May County, then closed with a brief but appropriate speech, after which upon motion of Mr. HOUTAKIEN, the meeting adjourned.

The President was to leave Cape May for Washington to-day.

The Regatta on Boston.

The regatta was the great incident of the Fourth at Boston. At 2½ o'clock a gun was fired from the judges' yacht for the boats for the first race to get ready. This was for fancy boats, to be rowed by boys under 16 years of age. Only three out of seven eight or ten which it had been announced would enter presented themselves, viz.: Battery Pet, of New-York; American Boy, of New-York; Young Jumper, of Boston.

The prizes were a silver oar for the winning boat, which was awarded to the Battery Pet, and a silver boat hook to the owner of the oar, which was won by the American Boy.

The second race was for dories. A beautiful silver trumpet, worth $125, was offered, to gain which five dories started. The race was won by Mr. WILLIAM DICKER, in the dory Daniel D. Westervelt, which was built in this City by Messrs. NEWMAN & RAINELL, expressly for the race.

The third race was for club boats, for a purse of $150, which was won by the four-oared boat J. D. R. Putnam, which was also built by NEWMAN & RAINELL, expressly for the regatta, and was rowed by Messrs. STEPHEN ROBERTS, F. LYNCH, H. LAWSON and J. MOTHERSON, of New-York.

The Putnam was also entered for the fourth race, but the judges decided she had been twice passed in the third race and came back to the starting point, thus shutting out the Putnam and Joseph Delaware, both of New-York, and both of which had been properly entered.

The New-York boat J. D. R. Putnam, the winner in Wednesday's regatta, was pitched against the St. John boat Neptune for $200 a side. The race was to come off yesterday afternoon, at 3 o'clock.

THE FOURTH IN MASSACHUSETTS.

CELEBRATION AT DORCHESTER.

EDWARD EVERETT'S ORATION.

History and Philosophy of the American Revolution.

From the Special Reporter of N. Y. Daily Times.

The celebration, on Wednesday, in Dorchester, Mass., of the seventy-ninth anniversary of the Declaration of American Independence, and the two hundred and twenty-fifth of its pre-settlement, was characterized by a pomp and circumstance so spirited and so imposing, and by an enthusiasm so general and so fervid, that the occasion may well claim for itself a place in the record of startling events which the history of that ancient, patriotic, and once respectable little township furnishes. It was glorious. It was not a thing to be described; it was to be enjoyed,—and it was enjoyed. Ten thousand men, women and children, shared in it, and of all the number we will venture to say that not one in a thousand saw the dog alone in demonstration, save the dissatisfaction of his barking drowned his mom, or can ever for the future recall the hallowed of it without the feeling of inmost pride and pleasure.

Dorchester is not a town in the ordinary sense of the word. It is a series of villages, with numerous cottages and farmhouses interspersed between, stretching away southwest from Boston along the Fall River Railroad for, probably, some ten or twelve miles.

The country is strikingly beautiful. Looking upwards from the low lands contiguous to the bay, a chain of green hills is seen to stretch away as far as the eye can reach, their summits crowned with glittering villages, and their sides dotted over with the snug homesteads of the thrifty New-England farmers whose white walls peep out here and there from amid the embowering foliage, or with the more pretentious structures to which, during the heat of Summer, the wealthy citizen retires from the burning atmosphere, the din and bustle of the City, to enjoy his ease and dignities. These eminences, alternating with deep vales thickly wooded, and threaded with winding and interminable lanes and pleasant streams, make up a landscape beautifully undulating and picturesque.

On the level top of one of the loftiest of these heights, about four-and-a-half miles from Boston, and known as Meeting-House Hill, the proceedings of the day were initiated. From an early hour in the morning the people were assembling to it from every quarter. The roads leading to it were filled with merry troops of pedestrians slowly wending their way up. Horses, wagons, carriages, hackneys, omnibuses, sulkays, coaches, carts, and every imaginable variety of vehicle ever seen in that region, kept hastening in and discharging their living and noisy loads. Nothing could exceed the gayety of the scene. Old men on whose heads eighty Winters had deposited their snows, whose eyes had seen the growth of a nation, but in whose hearts the fires of youthful patriotism time had never quenched—venerable matrons, surrounded by the loved ones whom this happy day had made again assembled under the old roof-tree—warm-hearted, enthusiastic youth—gay and laughing childhood—all mingled here in honor of the great event to which, perhaps, some of them had contributed, and which was "a joy for ever" to them all. Everything breathed gladness. The ringing laughter of rejoicing children, the distant echoes of the music as it rose and fell on the air, and reverberated among the hills—the rattling chorus which hundreds of patriotic throats, gushing up from the crowds scattered here and there through the fields—the booming of the cannon, the mounting lens which one could almost fancy, he heard from the fine and distant city, the sounds of the village bells trembling through the vales, even the distant and thrilling to—when of the occasion—holy motive,—all seemed to join with harmonious impulse in glad acclaim—the country is free! As the morning advanced the scene became still more imposingly gay. Flags were suspended from side to tree, across the lanes, hoped over porticoes, twined on poles, waved over heads, and exhibited in every available spot where it was supposed a flag might be placed. Firemen, dressed in brilliant uniforms, marched with music, their engines decorated all over with flowers, and each drawn by two or four horses; School processions, consisting of boys and girls, decorated with paper-colored sashes, and straw hats wreathed with garlands, kept pouring in on every side. Vendors of confectionery, fruit and ice cream, pitched their tents around, and gathered crowds of youthful patrons. Enterprising gentlemen from the country erected stalls under the hedges, and disposed to their numerous thirsty customers lemonade, and cholematic, home-made hop-beer, at exceedingly small charges. One old gentleman, with a striking Celtic physiognomy, vended large quantities of candy under a tattered piece of canvas on which could still be traced the words, "Religious Liberty." The "Dorchester Antiquarian and Historical Society" announced its existence, and the fact of its institution so far back as 1843, and its incorporation so recently as 1855, by a conspicuous advertisement over the door of a small house, in front of which a youngster, abetted by two or three laughing girls, persisted, with patriotic tenacity, in firing a pocket-pistol in the face of every passer-by. The society further manifested its zeal and devotion to the principles on which it is stated, by the following address written in endorsing hand on a strip of parchment, and posted on a paling:

SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF DORCHESTER, ALL HAIL!

You are particularly requested to register your names at the rooms of the Dorchester Antiquarian and Historical Society, where a book is open to receive any information relative to your genealogy or history, which may aid the Society in the completion of the genealogies of the families of Dorchester.

A compliance with this request will confer an important favor upon the Society, and upon all others whose study it is to preserve materials for a general history of our Republic.

SAM was also "around," and perpetrating his elegant jokes to the infinite amusement of his admiring friends. From the roof of the school-house at the road side, a pole was projected, to the outer extremity of which was suspended an effigy that must have presented a flattering and agreeable spectacle to the gentleman whom it was intended to represent. The young joker, in an inscription stuck on the door, as exceedingly unique, both in its orthography and chirography, as to show that he is going to carry his independent way of doing business into every department, expressed his sentiments in this fashion:

TO THE MEMORY OF JONATHAN BAYLIES,

the Opposer of the Celebration of the Anniversary of our Independence, self-styled man that we have been told of, that would rather sell of his liberty towards the Slaves for the only reason that we are so far off that he knows there is no danger of being called on for one red cent.

We would like to know how long our School Committee mean to let the man or manager keep one of our public schools to teach them Pro-scotism. SAM.

Behind the Public Hall, on the top of Meeting-House Hill, was the tent, which had been erected to accommodate the thousands of a dinner party. A tempting display of good things graced the tables that ran through it, and the vicinity was devoted by crowds of sweating, swelting Hibernians, unpacking baskets of eatables and crockery, and hauling tea and coffee in enormous [illegible] that Bright called Webster's Hill, which is situated at about a quarter of a mile to the northeast of Meeting-House Hill, was erected the pavilion in which Mr. EVERETT was to deliver his oration. A beautiful arch spanned the entrance. Admission to it [illegible] dished by ticket. The people began to pour in at 11 o'clock, and the stream was uninterrupted [illegible] and there taking part in the procession [illegible] o'clock, the [illegible] of [illegible] to the possession, which had [illegible] hill, had begun its [illegible].

The line wound up by an indiscriminate and irregular [illegible] among whom we observed GAMALIEL WASHINGTON MELLEN's rival for the Presidency, Mr. PRATT, dressed in enormous cocked hat, shark fall of feathers, and capacious sheet in the most [illegible] style.

The procession passed through the tent—the Governor, senior officers and guests, with the ladies accompanying them, were conducted to the seats respectively assigned for them, and the main body of the procession filled round and took places on the [illegible]. The pavilion was now crowded almost to suffocation; it was necessary to raise the canvas walls in order to furnish air to the [illegible] for hearing the speaker to the masses who were unable to gain an entrance legitimately. On the platform we observed the President, Hon. MARSHALL P. WILDER, Gov. CLIFFORD, Hon. EDWARD EVERETT, (the orator,) Hon. Rufus Choate, Hon. W. Kuyper, Hon. Thos. Motley, Adjutant-General Stone, the Governor's Staff and Council, Peter Cooper, New-York; W. Foster, Boston; Rev. Mr. Hosmer, Buffalo; Rev. Mr. Montague, Milton; Rev. W. Richards, Boston; Rev. Dr. Neill, do.; Rev. Mr. Miles, do.; Rev. Mr. Ellis, Charlestown; Rev. Nathaniel Hall, Rev. Mr. Frothingham, Rev. James H. Means, Rev. Dr. Walker, Col. Aspinwall, &c.

The seats in front of the platform were almost entirely occupied by ladies,—the beauty and fashion of the neighborhood—among whom we recognized the Governor's lady.

After order had been obtained through the exertions of the Marshals, under the direction of Major Cone,

The PRESIDENT rose, and announced that prayer would be offered by Rev. NATHANIEL HALL.

The reverend gentleman made an affecting and eloquent prayer, in the course of which he made strong allusions to the sin of Slavery.

A hymn, composed, we understand, by Rev. S. G. BULFINCH, was sung by a choir to the air of "God Save the Queen."

THE ORATION.

Mr. EVERETT was presented in highly complimentary terms by the President, and was received with tumultuous cheers.

The historific and learned gentleman, when silence had been restored, said:

Among the numerous calls to address public meetings to which I have been honored during my life, I have never received one with greater pleasure than that which brings me before you this day. Drawn up with unusual precision and care by a skillful pen, subscribed by more than one hundred and fifty of your leading citizens, and placed in my hands by a most respected Committee of this town, it assures me that "the citizens of Dorchester, without distinction of party, actuated by motives of public good, and believing in the salutary teaching of national events, when contemplated with an inquiring spirit and an enlightened judgment, are desirous of celebrating the Fourth of July, 1855, in a manner that shall prove creditable to that ancient town, instructive to the young, interesting to the aged, and morally profitable to the nation," and it invites me, as a native citizen of the town, to join you in carrying this purpose into effect.

You are well acquainted, fellow citizens, with the circumstances that prevented my appearing before you last year; in pursuance of this invitation I might still, without impropriety, offer you a sufficient excuse, in the state of my health, for shrinking from the effort of addressing an audience like this, and I feel deeply my inability, under any circumstances, to fulfill the conditions of your invitation as I have just repeated them. But I confess I have not been able to forego this first opportunity, the last, alas, no doubt, I shall ever enjoy, of publicly addressing the citizens of Dorchester—the place of my birth, my early education, and of all the kindly associations of my childhood. I have felt an irresistible attraction to the spot. I behold around me the originals of the earliest impressions upon my mind, which neither time nor the tides of a crowded life have effaced. Some fifty-six or seven years have passed since, as a school-boy, I climbed—Summer and Winter—what then seemed to me the steep acclivity of Meeting-house Hill. The old school-house, (it was then the new school-house, but I recollect that which preceded it,) has disappeared. The ancient church in which I was baptized is no longer standing. The venerable pastor whose affectionate smile still lives in the memory of so many who listen to me, has ceased from his labors; the entire generation to whom I looked up as to aged or even grown men are departed; but the images of all that has passed away have been cast and fixed, with more than photographic truth, upon the inmost chambers of my memory. Blame of us, my friends, companions of school-boy days, if we fain to cherish the thought of the past, to meditate on the lapse of years and the events they have brought forth, and to rejoice in the growth and improvement of our native town. We have pursued different paths in life, Providence has sent us into different fields of duty and usefulness, of action and suffering; but I am sure there is not one of us who has wandered or who has remained, that does not still feel a dutiful interest in the place of his birth, and who does not experience something more than usual sensibility on an occasion like this.

In these things, which in a rapidly improving community are subject to change, there are few places, within my knowledge, which within fifty years have undergone greater changes than Dorchester. The population in 1800 was 2,347; in 1850 it was a little short of 5,000. What was then called "the Neck," the most secluded portion of the old town, although the part which led to its being first pitched upon as a place of settlement, was in 1804 annexed to Boston; and being united with that city by two bridges, has long since exchanged the retirement of a village for the life and movement of the metropolis. The pick-axe is making sad ravages upon one of the venerable heights of Dorchester; the entrenchments of the other, no longer masking the deadly enginery of war, are filled with the refreshing waters of Cochituate lake. New roads have been opened in every part of our ancient town, and two railways traverse it from north to south. The ancient houses, built before the Revolution, have not all disappeared, but they are almost lost in the multitude of modern dwellings. A half century ago there was but one church in the town; that which stood on yonder hill, and the school-house, which then stood by its side, was till 1803 the only one dignified by the name of a town school. You have now ten churches and seven school-houses of the first class; and all the establishments of an eminently prosperous town, situated in the vicinity of a great commercial metropolis, have increased in equal proportion.

But all is not changed. The great natural features of the scene, and no where are they more attractive, are of course unaltered. The same fine sweep of the shore, with its projecting headlands,—the same extensive plain at the north part of the town,—the same gentle undulations and gradual ascent to the south,—the same beautiful elevations. I caught a few days ago from the top of Jones' hill the same noble prospect, (and I know not a finer on the coast of Massachusetts,) which used to attract my boyish gaze more than fifty years ago. Old hill, as we called it then, (it has lost that venerable name in the progress of enlargement, though it has grown half a century older,) notwithstanding the tasteful villas which adorn its base, exhibits substantially the same native grouping of cedars, the same magnificent rocks, and commands the same fine view of the harbor which it did before a single house was built within its precincts. Venerable elms that seemed big to me in my boyhood, seem but little bigger now, though I mean the patriarchs of fifty Winters on some well recollected branches. The aged sycamore which shaded the roof, beneath which I was born, still shade it; and the cellars lately grassed hard by, upon which only green sods can be seen, the sunny unknown graves placed there by the first settlers for protection against the wolves, still attracts the antiquary with its quaint and learned inscriptions, and preserves the memory and nearly of "the rude forefathers of the hamlet," not of some of the most honored names in the history of Massachusetts.

But I ought to apologize, my friends, for dwelling on topics too deeply tinged with personal recollection. The occasion on which we are met invites all our thoughts to public themes. It is two hundred and twenty-five years since the commencement of the settlement of our region; [illegible] the first settlers of Dorchester, of Governor WINTHROP's expedition, in 1630, landed at Salem and afterwards at the Dorchester settlement of American Independence of the United States. Our minds naturally go back to the foundations of the ancient Commonwealth of which we are citizens, and as they were within our limits. We dwell with pleasure and pride on the growth of our native town under the vicissitudes of colonial fortune, from its feeble beginnings to the dimensions of a large and flourishing municipality; and we meditate with just interest upon those eventful scenes at the commencement of the Revolutionary War of which our heights were the theatre, and which exerted an undoubted influence upon the Continental Congress at Philadelphia in hastening the Great Declaration.

Thus the appropriate topics of the day correspond with the three great divisions, which make up the whole system of political philosophy. We have: First—The foundation of a State,—the measures and agencies by which, under Providence, a new people is called into the family of nations,—manifestly the most important event, humanly speaking, that can occur in the history of our race. Second—We have the institutions and events which make up the political life of a community,—the organization and action, by which the distinctly appointed ordinance of Civil Government is administered, as is best to promote the welfare and progress of a people. Third—We have one of those great movements called revolutions, by which a people for urgent causes introduce organic changes in the frame work of their Government, and materially renovate or wholly reconstruct the fabric of their political relations.

In reference to each of these three great branches of political philosophy, the history of our ancient town and the occasion which calls us together furnish us with the most striking illustrations and instructive lessons. The foundation of a new State, in a quarter of the globe unknown, is an event without a parallel in the domain of authentic history. The time and the manner in which the first predecessors of the present inhabitants of Europe became established there, are but imperfectly known; while the first settlement of Asia and Africa is lost in those unfathomable depths of antiquity, which the deep sea-line of research has never sounded. It is only after comparing the authentic pages of our early history with the clouds of insipid fable that hang over the origin of Athens, and Rome, and Great Britain,—fables which neither PLUTARCH, nor LIVY, nor MILTON has been able to raise into dignity and interest,—that we perceive the real grandeur of the work of which the foundations were laid two centuries and a quarter ago on Dorchester plain.

So with respect to the second branch of political philosophy, the organization and administration of states, I am disposed to affirm that there are secrets of practical wisdom and prudence—elements of growth and prosperity in our municipal system—which deserve to be thoughtfully explored. Our towns, of course, are but units in the great sum which makes up the States. They possess none of the higher powers of government. Not by their hands is wielded the mace of legislation, or the scales of justice, the purse or the sword of the Commonwealth. But whenever the prosperity of New-England and the younger States modeled on its type is traced to its ultimate causes, it will be found to a good degree in this municipal system. In the pages of these ancient volumes—these old town records which have in few cases been better preserved than in Dorchester—there will be found lessons of experience, of blessed common sense shaping itself to the exigency of uncommon times, of patient and hopeful submission to present evils in the hope of a brighter day, of fortitude and courage in a humble sphere, of provident care for the rising generation and posterity, of unwearied diligence for the promotion of religion, morals and education, which in their joint effect have given us this goodly heritage.

Lastly, of those great movements by which organic changes are wrought in established Governments and a new order in the political world brought in, it must be admitted that the event which we commemorate to-day, in the character of the parties,—an infant confederacy of republics just starting out of a state of colonial pupilage on the one hand, and one of the oldest monarchies in Europe on the other;—the long and silent preparation and the gradual approach;—the soundness of the principles which impelled the movement, acknowledged as it was by the most illustrious statesmen of the mother country,—the purity and pristine simplicity of manners that characterized the revolutionary leaders,—the almost total absence of those violent and sanguinary incidents that usually mark the progress of civil war,—and the gradual development out of the chaos of the struggle, of well balanced systems of republican government and federal union;—these all must be allowed to set a mark of solitary dignity and elevation upon our American Revolution. They make it perhaps the only instance in history of the severance of a mighty empire, equally to the advantage of the new State and the parent country; the solitary case of a rising republic not built upon the calamitous ruins of earlier organizations.

You will readily perceive, my friends, that the thorough treatment of this subject in all its parts, would occupy much more time than can be reasonably devoted to a public address; and that in attempting to embrace them all in the remarks I venture to offer you, I must wholly omit some important topics and pass lightly over others.

It is impossible fully to comprehend the importance of the work which was accomplished in the colonization of America, without regarding it as a part of the great plan of Providence, in disposing the time and circumstances of the discovery of our continent; hidden as it was till the end of the fifteenth century from the rest of the world. This thought was brought so forcibly to my mind a few years since by a circumstance personal to myself, that I think you will pardon me for alluding to it, though in itself of a trifling domestic character. In the year 1841, I occupied with my family the Villa Careggi near Florence, a mansion once, as its name imports, (Casa regia,) a princely residence, belonging to the Grand Duke of Tuscany, but of late years private property and occasionally leased to travelers. Half fortress, half palace, it was built by COSMO DE MEDICI in 1444, nine years before the capture of Constantinople by the Ottomans in 1453. By that appalling event a barbarous race (which had issued from the depths of Asia some centuries before, and had engrafted the Mahometan imposture on the primitive stock of Tartarian paganism,) had stormed the last stronghold of the ancient civilization, the metropolis of the Greek Empire, and established the religion of the Koran at the heart of the old world. Had no great event occurred to renovate the civilization of the West, it is not easy to imagine what might have been at this day the condition of Christendom. Even as it was, the Sultan was for two centuries forward the strongest military power in the world—the scourge and the terror of the Mediterranean, and the master of some of the finest provinces of Eastern Europe.

But the first germ of revival sprung from the ruins of the old civilization. A host of learned and ingenious men, Christian scholars,—fled from the edge of the Turkish scimetar and took refuge in Italy. They were received with hospitality there and especially by the merchant princes of Florence. The Platonic Academy was established in the arcades of the Villa Careggi;—a great intellectual restoration took place in Italy and spread rapidly to the West of Europe;—where precisely at the same time the art of printing, (after slowly struggling through successive stages of improvement in the cities of the Netherlands and the Rhine,) burst upon the world in a state of perfection not surpassed at the present day. The stores of learning and thought accumulated by the mind of antiquity were thrown open to the world. The modern bay and Senate were not yet created, philosophy shammered in the jargon of the schools; but CICERO, and DEMOSTHENES, and PLATO stept forth from the dusty alcoves of monkish libraries. The pulpit of St. Chrysostom was hushed, but Moses and the prophets, the Evangelists and the Apostles were, if I may venture to say so, as from the dead. The first book ever printed with a date appeared in 1455, (just four centuries ago this year,) and in 1462, nine years only after the Koran began to be read at Constantinople, the Bible went forth on the wings of the press to the four quarters of the world. MAHOMET the second had struck down the last Christian emperor; but FAUST, and SCHOEFFER, and GUTTENBERG, the Strasburg printers, aimed a deadlier blow at MAHOMET the first, his code of barbarism, and all the hosts of political and spiritual darkness throughout the world. The walls of Byzantium spouting torrents of unquenchable flame had crumbled, but the mind of the world rallied to the new combat under the living artillery of the press, and came off victorious. A conflict more important to humanity, was never waged on earth. And from that day to this, the civilized world of Europe and America, is indebted for that superiority which no second night of ignorance can darken, no new incursion of vandalism can overthrow, to an enlightened, conscientious, independent press.

But Providence had other instrumentalities in store; higher counsels. A broader field of development was to be opened to regenerated humanity. The East of Europe and the West of Asia, by na-

The News from Europe.

By the simultaneous arrival of the Hermann at this port and the America at Halifax, we have received our files of European journals to the 20th, with telegraphic advices to the 23d of June. In these stirring times every mail brings us intelligence of more or less importance, but that by the America is of especial interest. During the whole course of the war the stubborn resistance of the Russians in defence of his country has surprised the world. Those who once scoffed at the idea that Muscovite chivalry could stand against French sabres and British bayonets have since found reason to change their opinions; and now, every skirmish before the walls of Sebastopol and every device of military tactics are duly weighed to find out whether they give any indication of the final issue of this momentous struggle. Reviewing the present and previous campaign, the Allies, it must be admitted, have slowly but surely progressed. They have thoroughly blockaded all the Russian ports and are masters of Azoff and the Black Sea. They have proved themselves superior to the Russians in two pitched battles and numerous skirmishes, and, under terrible misfortunes and difficulties, they have held good their position on an enemy's soil for nearly a year. Their entrenchments before Sebastopol are as impregnable as the fortress itself; and, though the besieged have manifested no shortness of valor, the besiegers have quadrupled their original force, multiplied their resources, and generally bettered their condition in such a way that the fall of Sebastopol has been lately regarded as a mere question of time. This consummation is now, however, as indefinite as ever, for the Allies have met with a most serious check and unexpected interruption to the gradual progress they were undoubtedly making.

From the accounts published elsewhere it will be seen, that on the 18th of June—the anniversary of Waterloo—the first regular assault on Sebastopol was attempted, and though these accounts may be exaggerated in many particulars, the fact is clearly established that the allies were signally repulsed. The French and English, it seems, respectively attacked the Malakoff and Redan towers, the possession of which would be tantamount to the capture of the Southern portion of the City, and the English loss alone is set down at 4,000 men, including Sir COLIN CAMPBELL and other distinguished officers. We must wait for the details before we can form any correct estimate of this repulse, or how far it may affect the issue of the campaign. That it will render the struggle more desperate, more bloody, and more lasting, we cannot doubt, for while one party will gain confidence by their success, it will be utterly impossible for the French and English to abandon their present enterprise under the stigma of actual defeat. This event sufficiently demonstrates that with the prestige of previous triumphs—with an enormous army in perfect discipline, and an able general in command—the allies are yet unable to take Sebastopol, and that much remains to be done ere that remarkable fortress can be reduced. Whether the impetuosity of PELISSIER, and his burning thirst for distinction, have led him in this attack, beyond the bounds of prudence, remains to be seen. It would appear now as if Lord RAGLAN (who has all along received such virulent abuse for his inactivity, from the English Press,) is about the wisest of the allied generals. The world has had its laugh at his meteorological dispatches; yet he is the man who first opposed the Crimean expedition, and always deprecated any attempt to carry the city by storm. His judgment has been correct in more cases than one, and it is a question whether the allies have not already spent more treasure, and lost more brave men, than Sebastopol and the whole Crimea are worth.

We have commented on the massacre of British seamen at Hango in another column, to which we refer the reader. The general news by these arrivals is not of any importance. It will be seen that the debate on Adulterating Reform was, on the 18th ult., resumed in the British House of Commons, and Mr. LABOUCHERE's motion was lost by a very large majority.

☞ Quite a spicy debate took place last night in the Board of Aldermen, upon the Mayor's refusal to give them information asked for in to the character of sundry Police appointments. The doctrine was broached that the Mayor is not the whole of the City Government, and it was even hinted that Mayor WOOD can do wrong. The Board would do well to act with caution. It may provoke a coup d'état. It should not forget that we have an Executive officer who never shirks responsibility except when he finds it convenient to do so, and who endorses all laws which he approves.

The Massacre at Hango.

England has at this got good cause for an indignant outburst of fierce wrath against the cruelty and savage nature of Russia, and which will, moreover, cause an exclamation of horror from all other Christian nations. We have heretofore read with many grains of allowance the published reports from English officers and travelers of the savage cruelty of Russian warfare, but the massacre of a boat's crew at Hango, who approached the shore under a flag of truce, for the purpose of setting some Finnish prisoners at liberty, appears to have been an act of cold-blooded disregard of the usages of war which have been held sacred among all civilized nations. The act appears to have been one of pure savage cruelty, and without palliation or excuse; though there may be something which the Russians have to offer which will materially lessen the apparent atrocity of their conduct. The survivor of the unfortunate boat's crew would not be likely to divulge anything which would tend to mitigate the horror which the cowardly and cruel act of the Russians must create. But we know that it was by a ruse that the English obtained soundings into the harbor of Kertch, which led to the capture of that place, and the imprudent boasting of the cunning device of the officer, who imposed upon the credulity of the Russian General, would very naturally put the Russians on their guard against the repetition of such a trick, and lead them to regard with suspicion any friendly approach to their shores. It might have been that some act on the part of the unfortunate boat's crew was supposed to be an attempt to take soundings. But let the case have been as it might, the murder of these unarmed men by a force so irresistibly large, even after the doomed wretches were in the power of their merciless foe, was an act of such savage atrocity that there can be but one feeling respecting it, and that must be one of unqualified detestation. The massacre of these men will, of course, create a feeling of exasperation which will lead to acts of retaliation, and we may anticipate other savage excesses on the part of the Allies which will make the blood run cold with horror, and give a fatal preeminence to the name of Hango in the history of this horrible affair.

Vacations for Business Men.

Every one knows, who knows our City, that our business men get very little rest or vacation. Business has become so complicated—on so grand a scale; it is so exciting to all engaged, and demands such incessant application, that the human machines are let run, like the looms and engines, right through the year. Thousands never leave their office or warehouse, except on Sundays, from one year's end to the other; others get a whiff of sea or mountain air in August; others are absent a month, perhaps; but this is all the relaxation or change which the delicate, never-resting, intense organ in the most of American heads ever gets. Whether this is well or not, must depend on the answer, which every man shall make to the silent question in his own breast—"What am I working for?" If it is for fifty, or one hundred, or five hundred thousand dollars, and a position in the great world of trade, to be enjoyed sans health, sans stomach, sans capacity for all better and higher things; why this is quite reasonable, and such a life may secure its aim. But if, on the other hand, a man says, "I want money, but I want more a capacity of enjoying myself; I want to have a relish for nature, and to take to myself something from the world of mind, if possible. I want to leave a healthy race behind me, and to reach old age, with something in me beside the golden shell of wealth;"—then it may be doubted whether the life of many of our merchants and professional men exactly tends to this result. In fact, to speak plainly, the very bad results are palpable to every one. Continually we hear of some model business man who never leaves his counting-house but for his meals, and who is being quoted on 'Change and in the papers, suddenly and mysteriously attacked with bleeding at the lungs, or a complaint of the heart, or a trouble in the head, and carried off, as the obituary said, by a mysterious stroke of Providence, but as his friends knew, by his counting-house. Others, too, who quote their own health as a triumphant proof of how well incessant head-work agrees with the body, forget to mention their children,—a nervous, dyspeptic, weakly, consumptive race, who may possibly live to curse, if not their father, at least his business.

It is notorious that the children of our merchants are not generally athletic and vigorous young men and women, but quite the contrary. The physique of our busy City population constantly degenerates. Such a decline shows itself first naturally in the weakest portion—the women. If it were not for fresh importations of a better stock from the country, we should soon present a puny race in the city. These results are not due to climate especially, for the climate at least of New-York, is the most healthy along the coast. We believe they are in the main owing to this incessant brain-work, unaccompanied by proper exercise of the muscles and by sufficient open-air amusement. It has often seemed to us that the vigorous health of some of our old statesmen and prominent clergymen, who have done immense labor in their time, was due above all to the zest zest with which they went into amusement. The lives of our lawyer-politicians are extremely irregular, and in many respects very wearing on the health, but it will be seen that these men have their times of fishing-frolic or sporting, or they have bought the very healthy, even if expensive, luxury of a farm, and after every new strain of the brain, these things give them a new relaxation. We have no doubt WEBSTER's farm and his "chowder" parties furnished him a new lease of life. So with those pastoral and country-loving clergymen—who of their craft more vigorous and likely to live than they? In many of these instances the cause may be confused with the effect—still amusement and bodily vigor walk very closely together.

It is well known that the hearty, healthy stock from which we are descended are marked by very different habits in this respect. The Englishman has a solid faith in vacations—in a good long time for country sports, for angling, or sporting, or hunting, or climbing mountains. The University-student has his three months; the Courts and the lawyers some ten weeks; even the busy merchants and manufacturers are off through long spaces for their sports and rest from labor. There is a great deal, too, of amusement scattered along the year:—cricketing, bowling, riding, angling and fishing. It is true, this is in a climate well fitted for out-door exercise, but it is also is a climate in which more brain-work can be done than under any other of the world,—a cool, equable, mild, damp atmosphere, which does not stimulate or disable too much. If an Englishman needs rest and exercise, how much more do we, with our intense clarified air, and our life and society leading everywhere to the most strained and excited activity.

Perhaps it is useless to exhort men to grasp at less and enjoy more, and to remind them of what every one knows, that the happiness of life is much more in a good stomach and a capacity for small pleasures, than in any amount of stocks, and bonds and mortgages. Still, every word helps. Some of our people begin to see that American life is not based on the most healthy and rational principles in the world. There are men who positively are contented to retire with less than $500,000. Others are seen occasionally on a yacht, or in a fishing party, or among the mountains, who come back quite certain that the enterprise paid, even as well as if they had been in Wall-street. The laws of health are uttering themselves in tones quite as impressive as the laws of trade, and the business public are beginning to listen. We trust the first fruits will be the thorough celebration and enjoyment of vacations and Holidays—and in that faith we commend to all our only National Holiday.

The Retiring Commissioners.

Three bureaus in the Department of the Interior are, or are about to be made, vacant: the Land Office, the Pension Office, the Patent Office. From the Land office Mr. JOHN WILSON is ejected, having been tainted with that pustule maligne, Know-Nothingism, which is said to be incurable otherwise than by the knife. So far as Mr. WILSON is personally concerned, there may be no outburst of inconsolable grief. He has been a tolerably industrious and honest officer—at least Mr. MONEYPENNY has found nothing to object to him: he has stood true to the worst doings of the Administration touching the Missouri line, thereby vindicating the friendship of Gen. CASS, to which his appointment was owing; and in asserting publicly that Americans should fill the offices of Government, he only proclaimed what his own actions had spoken quite loudly already. But this putting off the seals in commission at a moment so busy is a most unfortunate thing for the public service. The General Land-Office is overcrowded with employment. The voluminous records—they extend to very nearly ten thousand folio volumes in MS.—are daily swelling with the large business introduced by the Bounty Land Law, while the same law calls for an extension of the Government surveys at a place wholly unknown to practice. The rapid settlement of the new territories on the Missouri demands unusual energy and promptitude. The work assigned to years, in the common course of things, should be accomplished, if possible, in a twelvemonth. The labor called for by the Land Graduation bill has never been completed, notwithstanding the utmost diligence has been used by the clerks and assistants. The loss of a chief at such a crisis must inevitably produce delay and inconvenience. Either the Commissioner holds a sinecure—the duties of his office no more than sufficing for the capacity of a head clerk—or a Commissioner should now control the Bureau. A removal, under present circumstances, could not have been prompted by any regard to the public service; but wholly by private, malignant and unworthy motives. No unfitness for the transaction of his duties is charged upon Mr. WILSON; therefore, not he, but public business is sacrificed by his capricious removal. We could have better spared a better man. It may, at least, be required of the President that an officer as diligent be appointed, and appointed instantly.

Mr. WALDO, of the Pension office, is also understood to be on the retiring list, in consequence of his appointment to the Supreme Court Bench of Connecticut. Again, the vacancy occurs most inopportunely; for, in addition to the ordinary routine of the bureau, the vast labor of examining claims to bounty land, and issuing the warrants, demands an active and judicious man to control and expedite it. We are told that a very thorough system has been introduced into the dispatch of business. The system, we apprehend, is not yet fairly at work, as the number of warrants delivered weekly bears a very insignificant proportion to the vast bulk of 180,000 applications thus far filed. It is therefore desirable that no protracted interregnum may be allowed to exist, where so much is dependent on the energy which an untiring Chief may infuse into the transaction of business.

Mr. MASON withdraws from the Patent Office in pursuit of more lucrative service. Under his administration large arrears of business have been cleared away, and the processes incident to the grant of letters patent so shortened and facilitated, that instead of waiting a year, or years, as was the rule not very long ago, the patentee may expect his papers within a few weeks after the application. These results are brought about by the substitution of fresh men in place of those hackneyed slaves of routine, whose intolerable pedtinaceous has been as costly to unfortunate inventors as to Government. The services of Judge MASON have been important, and of enduring value. They must be parted with regretfully.

While the country is thus losing important officers at a critical moment, it has also lost its President. President PIERCE is at Cape May. For practical purposes he might as well be at Cape Horn, since he cannot by any possibility proceed to the appointment of successors for his retiring corps without the advice of his Cabinet; and the Cabinet is scattered to the four winds. Statesmen, even of the grade now standard at Washington, need rest and relaxation as well as their betters. It was less necessary perhaps to provide for the vacancies in the Pension and Patent Bureaus, their incumbents being in a condition to remain until successors can be found. But Mr. WILSON's removal was an fait accompli before the President sought the solace of salt water; and we must wonder no step was taken to replace the decapitated member, when his loss, otherwise a matter of indifference, would certainly become one of moment, should the energy of the office flag in consequence of his absence. It would be better in any future case to provide a successor before ejecting the incumbent;—in other words, it would be wise not to give way to the impulse of personal pique and resentment, where public interest is concerned.

Pennsylvania Know-Nothing Division.

The Know-Nothings of Pennsylvania, at their State Council now in session in Reading, have divided—Governor JOHNSON leading off for a Northern party. Other delegates organized a Council on the Philadelphia Platform. At the time of the Northern and Western secession from the National Council, a majority of the Delegates from Pennsylvania signed a protest against the adoption of the Pro-Slavery Platform, and in doing so they most undoubtedly represented the true sentiment of the Order in their State. Soon afterwards, the Executive Council of the State held a meeting, at which, under the influence of New-York and Southern Delegates, they resolved that the Order in Pennsylvania did not favor the action of their protesting Delegates, and declared in favor of the Pro-Slavery Platform. This action greatly pleased the Southern men, who believed that thereby Pennsylvania was secured to their interests. Like confidence was placed in the declarations of remaining Delegates from other States, and all of them have now proved worse than worthless. The Order in the North and West is too strongly impregnated with Free-Soil sentiments to move to their detriment, even at the command of prominent and ambitious members of their local Councils.

Mr. Everett's Oration.

We devote a large portion of our space this morning to the oration of EDWARD EVERETT, delivered at Dorchester on the celebration of the Fourth. We are quite sure no one who reads it will regret the space it occupies. It is an exceedingly eloquent and interesting production,—sketching the early history of the country in that graphic style and with that felicity of language in which Mr. EVERETT has no superior, and setting forth in a clear and admirable view the moral aspects of the Revolution and the philosophy of the foundation of States. It will be noticed that he speaks in terms of indignant denunciation of the recent conquest of Kansas by Missouri. The conclusion of his address was especially touching,—making personal allusion to his own retirement from public life, and expressing the hope that it might be final. The day seems to have been celebrated at Dorchester with unusual spirit and interest.

The Eastern delegates stood 73 to 27. Thirty Western men opposed the platform as not being strong enough.

Last night, resolutions on the calling a National Convention at Cincinnati on the 8th of January, on the Pennsylvania platform were offered. Ten delegates have seceded. The Convention is now discussing the resolutions which will certainly pass.

The Know-Nothings in Pennsylvania.

PHILADELPHIA, Thursday, July 5.

The Know-Nothing State Council now in session at Reading has divided—Governor JOHNSTON leading off for a Northern party. A number of delegates are also organizing a State Council on the Philadelphia platform. Governor GARDNER, of Mass., has written a letter to Governor JOHNSTON, urging Pennsylvania to join the Western wing of the party. There is much excitement among the members. The Council has repudiated the Philadelphia platform by striking out the twelfth article. Free-Soilism seems destined to rule the State.

The platform adopted by the State Council is that adopted by the National Council, except the 12th section, for which the minority resolution proposed in the National Council was substituted.

Ten members only seceded, and they adopted the National platform.

It is reported that Governor JOHNSTON deserted the Allegheny delegation and outraged the sentiment of his District on the majority platform.

Yesterday evening as a procession of firemen, Turners and others was parading the streets, a difficulty arose between one of the Turners and a boy, when an alarm was sounded by the Turners, and they all rushed back assaulting and throwing stones at the people in the streets. The riot then became general, and the Turners being armed with revolvers, commenced firing upon the crowd. Over a dozen pistols were discharged, and one young man was so severely wounded that he died within half an hour. Many others were badly injured by shots and stones, but none, it is believed, fatally. The police have arrested 24 Turners, against whom public opinion is very decided, as there appears to have been no excuse whatever for their conduct.

NEW-YORK CITY.

THE LIQUOR LAW.

HOW IT WORKS.

THE MAGISTRATES IN A DILEMMA.

DIFFERENT OPINIONS.

Liquor yesterday was sold as openly and as generally as it was on any day previous to the Fourth, notwithstanding various notices which helped to prevent it. The liquor dealers labor under the idea that only fines are to be imposed for violations, and that in only a minority of cases will the law deal with them. They seem to believe, they conclude to take the chances, and consequently there is no security which they can be tried. This is the general opinion of the liquor dealers. The opinion of the officers of the several Courts differs materially.

In the Marine Police Court, Justice Brennan was not present a person committed who is intoxicated. The policemen must take him back to the Station-house, and there keep him until he is sober. When they thought to give a correct statement, he is sworn, and if he equivocated the questions put to him, he is discharged.

In the Police Court, Justice Rogers takes the affidavit of the officer, who finds the drunk, makes his examination, and the person so intoxicated for examination in the Special Sessions. No affidavits are taken by the officers of the person to whom, or to whom the liquor was previously furnished.

In the Police Court, Justice Connolly takes the affidavit of the officer, examines the prisoner next after, finds the person so intoxicated without a fine, or holds the person for trial, or answer in the Special Sessions, just as he thinks proper.

In the Marine Police Court, Justice Welsh commitments are made temporarily; examines him or her at some other time, and discharges the prisoner. If the party is not intoxicated, he (the Magistrate) thinks he has no further jurisdiction in the case. He does it seems, to take the depositions of persons who have been arrested, and transmit the same to the Special Sessions, for trial, for arrests and seizure of illegal liquor which he issues. Justice Brennan thinks differently. He believes he has the power to issue a warrant, and to order the seizure of property when the case is clear, without the aid of the Nineteenth Ward issue before the Magistrate, or the intervention of a house where intoxicating liquor is sold. He, however, could not swear whether the liquor was imported or of domestic manufacture, and he thinks he ought to go and find out whether it was Scotch liquor or rum.

Justice Hogan claims nothing to do with the matter of committing persons found intoxicated, in his Court, but with the law itself. Justice Brennan and Welsh consulted the District Attorney, and they thought they are right. The question now is which of the magistrates is right? They all differ—some of them to a great extent. The following is a list of the commitments of some of the various Courts:

THE TOMBS.

Before Justice Rogers.

At this Court, Before Justice Brennan, no affidavit is taken of where the liquor is obtained. Those who have been taking "a jolly good Fourth," still lie in prison. The following committed for intoxication, some forty others, the names of which it is unnecessary to give, have been committed for disorderly conduct, which the magistrate thought proper to send also before the Sessions:

John King, John Connolly, Harvey Brown, John Ward, Patrick Hagan, John Owens, Jas. Kelly, John Conway, Hannah Wilson, Jas. Harvey, Jas. Fox (Fourth Ward), Pat. Ward, Peter Smith.

Before Justice Welsh.

Owen Boyle, Catharine Cunningham, Ellen West.

The prisoners have been committed in manner as the Magistrate thinks proper. There were other cases which he dismissed or by taking the defendant and discharging him. Some were discharged without a fine after the depositions had been taken.

SUPERIOR POLICE COURT.

Before Justice Matsell.

There a large number of persons were arrested for intoxication, and a great many for being drunk and disorderly. The cases in a great many cases could not be ascertained whether the drunkard, though disorderly, was actually drunk, although he had smelled a horn. The magistrate making observations for the day discharged the parties. It is unnecessary to give the names of the parties. The policeman depositions have been committed, will show what a hard case it is for a man to tell exactly where the last glass was taken, or the place he got it up. It will be seen that a few of the parties had intoxicated didn't pay for all they drank.

John McCrea got it at the house of his father-in-law, and didn't pay for it.

Thomas Shaw got her liquor in Twenty-fourth-street, but didn't know the name of the house.

Peter Williams didn't know where he got his grog.

Owen Mahoney, drunk.

John Hardwick got the liquor at a friend's, but didn't say for it.

John Morgan didn't know where he got drunk. The place where he had been last he left his coat, which is now in pawn.

Lawrence Conway didn't know where he got intoxicated.

Bernard McKane says he did not get drunk—he was sick.

John Rodger paid a woman a quarter to go and get some liquor for him; would not know the woman again.

Thomas Burke said not one shilling he was intoxicated to-day, had drunk one glass of liquor that day, which was different from the day previous; just one glass in his own house, which his wife brought in; could not say where she got it; took a glass of liquor on Greenwich, near Fortieth-street, and Ninth-avenue from a man named Campbell, but did not pay for it.

Thomas Ward said he saw the person from whom he got the liquor that made him intoxicated.

Thomas Mooney, of Greenville, N. C., who had been here for jury trial, could not tell where he got the liquor that made him intoxicated, he had got it so long.

Patrick Kelly drank the liquor which made him intoxicated, at a house kept by Tom Russell, but didn't pay for it.

John Sharp went to several places in the Eighth-ward, and had liquor, but could not tell the last place he had entered. He had gone to the bar, and had a drink, when he left. When he recovered himself he was lying in the Station-house.

HOUSE MARKET COURT.

Before Justice Welsh.

Very little business in the inebriate line, so far, has come before this Court. It will be seen that the parties committed for intoxication can tell where they had their last drink.

Patrick McCabe swears that he purchased liquor at the private houses of one Hooks, at the corner of Houston and Sixth-street. He drank Boston bitters at another place on the corner of Avenue B and Third-street. At a Dutchmanie on the corner of Willet and Houston-street, he drank brandy. But at which of these places he don't say where he got drunk or intoxicated.

William Higgins swears to obtaining brandy of Daniel Casey, corner of Eleventh-street and Avenue B; which he felt the bar-room his were raised to such an extent that he fell into the warm embrace of a police.

Daniel Fitzsimmons deposed to being furnished with liquor at Brennan's distillery, No. 8 Sheriff-street. He did not know as to who furnished the liquor.

There were all the cases that came before Justice Welsh.

The Corporation Attorney will have quite a time of it collecting the fine of $10, imposed by law on persons found drunk.

Some rum-sellers may take counsel now; a drunkard, if seen by the police, cannot cross the threshold of any rum-shop, but he will be arrested. There will be fewer drunkards by and by.

Some of the grocery groggeries in the Ninth Ward have closed up their bar-rooms. Old customers whose noses are shorter, are still made welcome behind the counter.

The Liquor Trouble in Brooklyn—The Week Previous to Sunday under the New Law.

Throughout the whole City of Brooklyn, containing a population of nearly one hundred thousand souls, only twenty-eight persons were taken in the month of July for drunkenness, in the Districts as follows: First District, 8; Third District, 3; Fourth District, 8; Fifth District, 8. The great number of arrests in the last two days was for nothing, certain licensed rum-sellers, and a large majority were for minor offences. The parties arrested for drunkenness were generally taken before Justice DANIEL E. HARVEY and Justice DANIEL ROBERTS, and some, after examination, were fined, others discharged, others committed, or, in default of payment, were sent to the City Prison for ten days—the lowest term allowed by the law. The following are specimen proceedings, the first two being before Justice Harvey:

Thomas Burke, Cockroft-street, Ellen West.
